

The following are two examples of the updates that my customers receive during the making process. The names of the customers are made invisible to protect their privacy.

Hi customer 1,

This week I cut the housings for the dovetails, finished the butternut backboards of the cabinet boxes and glued them together. They are strong enough to carry an elephant. In the original design I was going to put plywood back panels in the boxes because they are dimensionally more stable. I suddenly realized that ifname, in her future house want the cabinet in the middle of the room she can do that because the cabinet will also look nice from the back. You could even use the boxes as separate units and pile them up where you need them and sleep on the shelves ☺. With this change the versatility of the cabinet increase considerably.

Next step are the black walnut frames. I am not looking forward to that part because it will be a slow process to do it right. So far, so good. Hope you guys like what you see so far. Have a great weekend,

Erik

Hi customer 2,

Your music stand is almost finished. I only have to sand it one more time, work on a few details, and decide if I will cut the heel and finish it with surfix oil wax. To continue, you have to let me know if you want to pick up your music stand somewhere this spring or summer in Maine or that you want me to send it with UPS to Chicago. If you prefer the last I need the mailing adress to estimate the transportation cost. Please let me know what you would prefer. Next you see a few pictures of the last steps in the process and a picture of the end result for this week (note: the end result after finishing will be much darker). Best regards,

Erik
